

Jonathan A. Disselhorst (University Tuebingen)

Imaging Tumor Heterogeneity

Tumors are well-known to exhibit widespread genetic and phenotypic heterogeneity. With non-invasive imaging technologies, some of these intratumoral variations can be observed; each imaging technique provides a different view on the tumor microenvironment. Applying machine learning techniques to multi-parametric and multi-modality imaging data can help to decode intratumoral heterogeneity.