

Davide MICHIELIN

Hi! I am Davide, an environmental biologist and freelance science writer. I am currently based in Verona but I can't help moving, both for work and for leisure: you can meet me in Milan and Rome frequently.

After graduating, I collaborated for 3 years with some scientific institutes based in Italy and Austria, studying the effects of pollution on invertebrate communities. At the same time, I attended a professional master course in Science Communication.

Since July 2015, I have been collaborating as a freelancer with some Italian magazines and newspapers, writing on environmental and health issues: Le Scienze, la Repubblica, La Stampa, National Geographic, Wired and so on. Meanwhile, other different experiences: explainer at Genoa science festival, speaker at Cagliari science festival and moderator at other events such as Pordenonelegge and Open Innovation Days in Padua.

Since 2017 I have been working as social media manager at Repubblica.it and last year I became web editor at Europa Donna, the European Breast Cancer Coalition.

What else? I love travelling – I am in love with South America – and playing with Lego. I know, I am 32 years old. But I never grew up completely.