

Marat KUZAEV

My name is Marat Kuzaev, I'm an editor at the Non-News Department of the Russian news agency TASS.

My job is to cover all things science and sometimes tech as accessible as possible. I write, edit, collaborate with the Infographics Department, etc.

Before that, I worked as a freelance screenwriter for two YouTube bloggers with science-oriented channels. Actually, this is how I ended up sitting in front of meta-analyses, p-values and other things we all adore.

At first, my area of expertise was American television series and TV in general. I got MA in media communications thanks to my thesis on comedy shows. Also, I received BA in philosophy. Heidegger is cool when you think that you understood him (once or twice in a lifetime).

I'm pretty much into any branch of science, but what really excites me is immunology, genetics and psychiatry. They share the subject, that is, self in the broadest sense. Ideas that these areas produce affect our understanding of who we are (not Sein und Zeit, alas), commercial interests and existential hopes. I can't help but dive into it.

See you!