

Emanuela BARBIROGLIO

I am a reporter focused on environment, business, human rights, and the politics in between.

I work for Forbes.com, the data journalist network EDJNet and as a part-time editor at the association magazine Headquarters.

Before that, I worked for Property Week in London, handling data analysis, visualizations and investigations. I covered sustainability and environmental issues such as energy regulations, the use of technology across the sector, the risks posed by contamination or floods.

I completed my education across Italy, Germany and the UK. I studied History and Anthropology in Genoa, got my first MA in Political Science after a period spent at Potsdam University, then my second MA in Science Journalism at City University of London. My reporting on migration and politics appeared on a variety of outlets, including Deutsche Welle, Open Migration, Euronews and SciDev.Net.