

Joao CARDOSO

Distinguished communicator with awards and honorary mentions. Master in Cellular and Molecular Biology, with currently two years' worth of research, 1 year and a half of science communication experience, an expert in public interaction and engagement, oral presentations, storytelling, content creation and production.

Currently, he is a PhD student at the Science History and Scientific Education program at the Institute for Interdisciplinary Research of the University of Coimbra.

Carrier of relevant scientific knowledge, able to disseminate it in different publics, either scientific and non-scientific, with the ability to clarify both simple and complex theories and concepts to different target audiences.

Formation in body language, media collaborations, multimedia production, and social media management.

FameLab Portugal 2018 Alumnus, having placed in the 3rd place in the National Final and won the public prize. Able to communicate well in English, as certified with a Cambridge Advanced Exam certificate, and has some knowledge in the Japanese language and culture.

Has a high interest in the field of transmedia for scientific themes communication, health literacy promotion, cultural assessment and ethnography, Portugal-Japan cultural and historical links, and animation.