

Ani BAJRAMI

Hi everyone!

My name is Ani Bajrami and I work as a researcher at the Museum of Natural Sciences “Sabiha Kasimati” and as an adjunct lecturer of Principles of Anthropology at the University of Tirana, Albania.

I hold a PhD degree in Conservation Biology and a Master in Psychology at the University of Tirana.

I occasionally write in some major Albanian media outlets on topics such as human evolution, climate crisis, the rise of science populism in Europe and USA, health risks deriving from the use of fake news, etc. From 2019, I became member of Balkan Network of Science Journalism.

Currently I co-founded and serve as lead editor in the popular science online magazine Sapiens.al.

I want to enhance my skills in science writing and other forms of science media and I am eagerly looking forward to the Erice International School of Science Journalism. In my free time, I love reading poetry, listening to music and playing tennis.