

Andjela MRDJA

I am a science journalist and expert associate for cooperation with scientific and research institutions at the Center for the Promotion of Science (CPN) in Belgrade, Serbia.

Since 2017, I have been writing science popular articles for CPN's official media: quarterly science popular magazine Elements and science popular portal Elementarium. In addition, my articles are occasionally published in National Geographic Serbia and independent daily newspaper Danas (Today), both in print and online edition. I also wrote scripts for short science popular shows on the national Radio Television of Serbia "RTS". Every May, I write scientific articles for the exhibition within the traditional national manifestation May, Month of Mathematics "M³", organized by the Center for the Promotion of Science.

Given that there are not many science journalists in Serbia, I cover almost all areas. From Astronomy, Neuroscience, Chemistry, Medicine, through Ecology, Psychology, Sociology to Zoology, Geography Physics, etc.

I am also involved in two EU projects on Science Communication and moderator of several workshops on this topic.

Apart from science journalism and science communication in general, I like spending free time on long walks with my dog, doing windsurf, rock climbing, skiing, kayaking, playing piano and guitar in the band, reading and travelling.
