

What makes a good scientist?

Motivation

Being organized and disciplined

Exploring the world and different ideas

I think what makes a good scientist is to be willing to spend a bunch of time learning and practicing and working and never give up

In my opinion a good scientist is a person who finds a solution to the most common problem.

Curiosity and Open-Mindedness

First think about the problem, Then make a plan, then look for the efficient solution and discuss with your mentor.

To be able to enjoy all aspects of life

What makes a good scientist?

The ability of understanding phenomena at a deeper level, looking for possible ways of improving even more our description of reality

Trying new things without worrying about the result.

A good scientists needs to able to connect the dots. Try to build an intuition about the field, rather than just learning skills exclusively.

Practice, persistence, Skills, curiosity, attention to details, patience and A GOAL.

Crazy hair styles

Always question yourself

A good Scientist is logical, they question, analysis, never give up and look into meaning full things

Being born in the early 1900s

What makes a good scientist?

Make hypothesis. Test them.
Be aware of the underlying assumptions that you make.
And above all, no curiosity,
no science.

Be open-minded

To be a good scientist you don't have to be like Einstein. Sometimes, passion and work are what you need

Being prepared to fail
many times

Curiosity

A good scientist should have great experience and expertise in his research work as well as to have a great motivation to do something for the human beings and for future generations.

Exploration, Deep Observations, passion with field

Exploration, passion with field, deep observation

What makes a good scientist?

Interest to explore things

71 - 91

17

What % of your potential you feel you are now using in your work?

What are your 3 most important values?

48 responses

Which Strong Ego's you recognize in yourself?

Which Exaggerated Ego's you recognize in yourself?

Which Allergies you have?

When do you feel SMART?

